Jeff Foxworthy explains how he coined the term 'blue-collar' comedy

BV NEAL JUSTIN

Minneapolis Star Tribune Jeff Foxworthy spent a recent Tuesday morning sitting in a tree with a bow and arrow.

"That's kind of who I am," said the 64-year-old comic a few hours later, climbing up a hill from his home in west-central Georgia so he could get phone reception. "I'm very blessed and thankful to be successful at doing this. But I don't have an aircraft hangar with 50 Porsches in it. I have a farm. That's what I did with mv money."

hunting and choice of living off the grid are just a couple of reasons why he remains one of the country's all-time most successful comics.

Q: In your last TV special, "The Good Old Days," you didn't tell any of the "You know you're a redneck" jokes. Have you officially retired those?

A: I probably haven't done them onstage in 10 years. It's funny, that's what everybody remembers me for. I never thought about it until a buddy of mine pointed out that they Foxworthy's passion for were one-liners that were easy to remember. People could tell three of them at the water cooler the next day and get laughs. But even at the height of their popularity, I only did them during the last five minutes of a two-hour show. I'm more of a storyteller. If you look at the body of my work, it's mostly about family and mv wife.

Kathleen Madigan get labeled Blue Collar Comedy Tour." I'm as blue-collar comics. What does that mean?

A: Let me tell you how I first came up with it. When the Kings of Comedy Tour started, one of their first stops was Atlanta. I was reading about it in the paper and it said the show was for the urban, hip audience. I called up Bill Engvall and said, "Urban and hip? Well, that leaves a lot of people out. We need to do a show for everyone else." He laughed and said, "What do you want to call it?" Without giving it Q: Like you, Ron White and much thought, I said, "The Before that, it was being on not singing a sad song because I had a great childhood. When I was a kid, we had a dirt yard. Nothing prepared me to be a little famous and have some money. I'm still kind of that kid.

Q: You really burst onto the national scene with your own network show in the mid-'90s, but you haven't done much acting since then. Was the sitcom kind of obligatory in those davs?

A: That was it. That's what separated you from the pack.

"The Tonight Show." If Johnny Carson called you over to the couch, you went from playing clubs to headlining in Vegas overnight. It was like being made in the Mafia. Of all the things I've done, the sitcom was the least satisfying. Right off the bat, they didn't want me in the writers' room. And I was like, 'Yeah, but it's called "The Jeff Foxworthy Show." The scripts weren't that funny. I tried to act like I was sad when it was canceled, but I really wasn't. I'd much rather do stand-up. Louie Anderson.

Time has opened wounds instead of healing them

DEAR ABBY: We moved from Indiana to Florida 30 years ago. Ten years later, I moved back for a job, but returned to Florida after 9/11. I recently received a letter from a friend telling me that I hadn't visited Indiana in 14 years.

This friend, who has been in a long-standing relationship for 40 years, visited us once in Florida 28 years ago. He surprised us by coordinating a liaison during that visit with an old boyfriend — who slept over. It was very awkward. This friend hasn't visited us here again, but did travel to Miami. We drove eight hours "visiting us."

call when they visit the area? Should I include this in my letters to my friend, which are frequent? He guilted me in his last letter. How should I word my response? I feel a need to say something, but I want the words to be right.

- ONE-SIDED IN FLORIDA

DEAR ONE-SIDED: You and this person are pen pals, nothing more. If you enjoy the correspondence, ignore the attempt at a guilt trip if that's what the comment was intended to be. You and his round-trip to see him and his sisters are acquaintances, not partner. He considered this friends. Their lack of communication with you should have sent that message. I cannot and his partner have come understand why you should ing grievances. Concentrate calling or seeing us. I was also on the people in your life who lived in Indiana, but only one friendship and you will be CALIFORNIA much happier.

welcomed their own children. I'm not sure where I fit in when it comes to being a grandparent. Friends of mine said I am a grandma. I say, "By default, I am a grandma." My friends also said instead of calling me "Grandma," the grandkids could call me something else to differentiate between their biological grandmas and me. I recently signed a birthday card for one of the grandkids and wasn't sure if I should sign just my name "Louise" or "Grandma Louise," so I settled on "G-ma Louise."

Because of COVID, we hadn't been able to visit much with the grandkids. However, when it comes to gifts, I'm usually the one picking them out and, in some cases, my husband and I split the cost In my heart, I feel they are my grandkids, but I don't think my husband's kids view me that way. AM I a grandma?

rum-based cocktail that's nice and boozy and surprisingly creamy, considering there's no actual milk! Paw paw can be tough to find, so you can add your own favorite fruit or omit it altogether, and it's still delicious!"

2 1/4 oz cans condensed coconut milk

115 oz can Coco Lopez coconut cream

113.5 oz can coconut milk

1 tsp salt

1/2 tsp ground nutmeg 1/2 tsp cinnamon (I use Sri Lankan Ceylon cinnamon, but cassia will work as well, with a bit more of an aggressive flavor)

1/2 tsp vanilla extract 11/2 cups pawpaw pulp

1/4 cup raw sugar Rum (Preferably dark, but any rum will do)

Directions

Mix all ingredients in a saucepan and bring to a boil. Lower the heat and simmer for 10 minutes. Remove from heat and let cool for 20 minutes.Pour the mixture into a half-gallon container, add the cinnamon stick and cool in the refrigerator.

To Serve:

Combine 3 ounces of the mix with 2 ounces rum. Stir or shake without ice to retain the creamy texture and pour over crushed ice into a julep cup. Optional: Garnish with a light dusting of fresh grated nutmeg, burnt cinnamon, paw paw and mint or juniper.
