

By the bottle

Connecticut residents pay a 5-cent surcharge for every tiny bottle of alcohol, called nips, they buy. The money goes back to the towns where the nips were sold to help fund environmental efforts.

The figures shown were collected in each town between Oct. 1, 2021 to Sept. 30, 2022.

